GILLETT IS VICTOR IN SPEAKER FIGHT

Bay State Candidate Defeats Mann, 2 to 1, in Republican Caucus

"DICTATION" RESENTED

Washington, Feb. 28.—Representative Frederick H. Gillett, of Massachusetts, was named as the prospective Speaker of the next House of Representatives at a caucus of the Republican members last night.

Mr. Gillett was chosen on the first ballot over James R. Mann, of Illinois, present Republican floor leader, and Representative Philip Campbell, of Kansas.

With 225 Republican members of the next House voting the ballot was as follows:

Gillett, 138; Mann, 69; Campbell, 13; Eech, of Wisconsin, 4; and Mondell, of Wyoming, 1. The victory scored by Mr. Gillett was a distinct surprise, as the race had been regarded as a very close affair.

Representative Mann immediately moved that the nomination of Representative Gillett be made unanimous, and this was done by acclamation. The formal election of Mr. Gillett will not take place until the next Congress convenes, but the choice of tonight's caucus is final.

W. Tiler Page, of Maryland, was selected as clerk by acclamation, and Joseph G. Rodgers, of Philadelphia, now a House employe, was nominated for sergeant-at-arms over Representative William J. Caryl, of Wisconsin, whose term expires March 4.

Pennsylvania's Vote

Pennsylvania's delegation, the largest of any state, voted as follows:

For Gillett—50: McPadden, Temple; Sells, Spring; Kessler, Hulings; House, Hulings; Jones, Craig; Watson, Craig; Reber, Kendall.

For Mann—5: Grist, Morin; Porter, Morin.

Absent—3: Costello, Burke.

The action of the conference, which was presided over by Representative Townner, of Iowa, came after two hours of speeches.

The name of Representative Gillett was presented by Representative Greene, of Vermont, while Representative Kahn, of California, nominated Representative Mann. In seconding the name of Representative Campbell, which had been placed before the caucus by Representative Anthony, of Kansas, Representative Sweet, of Iowa, declared against what he termed the reactionism presented by both Mr. Gillett and Mr. Mann.

"The future of the Republican party in the House," Representative Sweet said, "looks very 'hazy' and 'pernicious'."

After his selection, Mr. Gillett issued the following statement:

"I have reached the goal of my ambition, a happiness I suppose comes to few men. I feel the deepest gratitude to my generous friends and supporters, and I have not the slightest venes, but the choice of tonight's caucus is final.

W. Tiler Page, of Maryland, was selected as clerk by acclamation, and with the prodigious problems of the coming session."

Criticism of Administration

Mr. Gillett is not primarily an orator in the usual political acceptance of that term, but he has a way of presenting statements in such a forcible and convincing manner as to cause marked anxiety on the part of those opposed to his way of thinking.

Some of Gillett's war speeches were gems in their way, notably one in the House not long before the election of last fall, in which he ridiculed the Democratic argument that a Republican Congress would be gratifying to the German Kaiser.

Mr. Gillett began his Washington career back in 1893, with the Fifty-third Congress, and has been there ever since. His personal popularity has been continuous, barring one short period during which he was roundly blamed by department clerks as the originator of a move which resulted in the extension of their working hours to 4:30 o'clock.

Tall, slender, with clear blue eyes and a short-cropped beard, mainly gray, Mr. Gillett, who is sixty-seven years old, was a bachelor up to 1913, when the widow of Congressman Rockwood Hoar, of Massachusetts, became his bride.

Mr. Gillett will be the first Speaker of the House Massachusetts has had since the days before the Civil War. New England has had two since that period, and both made a distinct impression on the national life: the late James G. Blaine, and Thomas B. Reed, both of Maine.

It remains to be seen whether prospective Speaker Frederick Huntington Gillett will share in their fame as the presiding officer of the most important legislative body in the world. He was born at Westfield, Massachusetts, October 16, 1851, and is a lawyer.

the Adjutant General and the State Treasurer. Ex-Lieutenant Governor McClain will be the executive secretary of the commission.
